Since the physical topography of the area is highly varied, with moutains, cave, streams, beaches, and sea, it supports several types of forest, i.e.

evergreen forests on southern Koh Lanta Yai and on Koh Ngai, limestone mountain forest on Koh Rok and Koh Har, beach forest on the beaches of all islands, mangrove forest, and grassland. Most of the islands are not that large and as such only smaller mammals are found, such as Wild Boar, Dusky Langur, mouse deer, Indian civet, and squirrel. Several species of reptiles are found, most notably the Bengal Monitor and the Water Monitor, both of which can easily be seen. There are also over a hundred species of resident and migrant birds.

The marine resources seen here are not only very attactive, thery are extremely diverse, with an underwater ecosystem supporting hundreds of species of fish and marine life, including the Whale Shark and Manta Ray, which makes this yet another important scuba diving site in Thailand.
